THE MAJOR-GENERAL IN RETIREMENT.

Not very long ago the high anthorities who rule the destinies of the Indian Army decided on abolishing that most interesting and ornamental institution—the Major-General in redromant. Up to a short time ago, it was the sestom that when a Colonal ratired he received a step in rank, and was henceforth known to his friends and to the world as a Major-Goneral. So far as we are aware, only one officer, known to have declined this honour. This contlems n wrote in on the eve of his rotire. went, and begged that he might not be gesetted Major-General, but might be allowed to remain plain Colonel. He gave the following reason. " All I shall gain by being called General when I go to England," he said, " will be the privilege of paying two-pence in the shilling more for everything than I should have done if I had remained simply a Colonel, Therefore, I respectfully beg to be allowed to retain the letter title." But this was, we believe, custom that when a Colonel retired; he was gazetted to the higher cank, and was henceforth as much a General Officer as though he had sotually commanded a division in the field. It, may be interesting to recall the way in which he rose to that distinguished position. Everyous knows that the officers of the Indian Army, as a body, sae more real service and have more rough work than the officers of almost any other Army, and that to a very large number of them the step of Major-General on retirement came as a well-meritad recognition of an active and distinguished career. But the in lien Army is amphatically an Army of anomalies, and many officers rose from Lightenants to Gineral, the whole of their active service being un ler the punkah and their were bein z waged with the pra au ! not with the sword. A young Lieutenant, after three or four years service, gets an appointment we will suppose, in the Pay Department. Now it is well known that when a youngster gets into Pay, he is regarded as a made man. His parents and goardisus rajoica that becan never want anything from them again. His companions look upon him as a lucky fallow. He himself thinks he is just the man for the post. And very likely he is. In any case, he finds himself daly promoted to Captain in the performance of those weekn and important duties so much appropriated by the Army it large, which almost idolises the Pay Department and its genial method of dealing with loubtful allowances. Time goes on and he bocomes a Major, still sitting under the punkah, and still signing those wonderful objection statements which the office Bab is elaborate with so much skill. By the time he is Lieutenant-Colonel, he is yory high up indeed in the Department, and his monthly salary has gone up la proportion. Then still waging those bloolless buttles with the pan, and shodding much innount office ink, he comes to the last step but one in his military promotion. He is full Colonel; and as time goes swiftly ou, he appears one day in the Guzette as retiring from the service, and as being in consequences promoted to the rank of Major-General. And so he makes his bow and says good-bye to India, which has certainly troated him very well. And he, too, has done his duty honestly and without sparing himself If his military career—as it is pleasantly called—has been an anomaly, the But since the anthorities have discreed that the ornamental figure of the Major-G meral in retirement shall disappear from the public gaze, all this belongs in a certain degree to the past. That is to say, in the future there will be no Generals save those for whom there are shitable commands, an I who have guined promotion by distinguished service. So before these interesting figures disappear from the scene alto retier, it is just as well to see what become of those oldfashioned Major-Generals, when having bui't fault is not his, but that of the system. bridges, or kept accounts, or exercised authority as Bantar Masters for five-and thirty-years. they returned to their native land in receipt of their pension and an honourable and imposing military title. As a common exparience they manally settled themselves in some of those well-knuwn watering-places in England, such as Bath, or Chaltenham, or Brighton, or Eastbourne, where the climate s supposed to be suited to the damaged Indian constitution, and the way of life to be more or less varied and entertaining Bome fancied the neighbourhood of the Crystal Palace, where for a small annual outlay they could enjoy all the gaieties of that famous establishment, and over the last mail from India, yowing that the latest selection for a Brigade was a job, and generally denouncing the authorities as giving everytions of hum in nature that when most Anglo-Indians are serving their time out in India, they always think that all pleasure and enjoyment await them when once they retire and get to old England. But when they have their heart's desire and get to old England, then their thoughts turn constantly to India and the pleasant times they had there; and the things that interest them most in reality are not those by which they are surrounded at home but those going on in the distant land they used once upon a time to gramble at so heartily. But this is a ourious little piece of experience which everyone apparently learns for himself, and which no one seems able to impart to anybody else. India casts a smell over everyone who has dwelt there,

But to return to the Major General in retirement. Having often spent, as we have said, all his life in an office, doing work that is very necessary, if not very warlike, he finds himself on returning to his native country, regarded as a decided authority on military affairs. When he drops in at his banker's to have a chat about money matters, and to ask advice as to how he shall invest a few hundreds he happens to have lying idle (that most comfortable of positions to be in), he finds his banker full of the latest phase of the Afghan Question, and extremely anxious to know what Abdur Rabman really thinks of the situation. No doubt the General has studied the question on the spot, and knows to a nicety how many Afghan troops could take the field in case of a sorim. mage, and whit their fighting qualities are. So also, when he has to see his lawyer about the lease of the house he is going to take, he finds the man of parchments much more auxious about the designs of Russia on India, and much more carer to have the General's opinion on the strength and morals of the Russian Army, than he is about the clauses of the house lease. And even when he goes out to a tennis party, he finds: that a gentleman to whom he is casually introduced in full of burning curiosity as to the chances of the next war between Germany and France, and quite certain that the General is in a position not only to forecast that eventuality with some sort of scoursey, but must also be able to explain the probable area over which the that this sort of question is a little rough on a man who laid aside the sword for the pen more slight drawbacks to his lot. He finds that a very alementary course of reading, backed up by some platitudes delivered with a certain selemnity of expression, enables him to pass for a thoroughly well informed man, and one well abreast with the military topics of the day. For the rest the retired. Major-General is a thoroughly amiable esteem by his neighbours. He is a church warden, and is of much use in smoothing over matters between the vicar and his flock. He society; and has started a magazine club similar to the one he founded in Gum Dam in 1860 and which was such a success there. Everybody knows the General and likes him, and he is much consulted on all sorts of delicate affairs. trustworthy demonstration of rain-making is By and bye, he will disappear entirely from the some as the Government has cut off the supply. and those now in existence will be the last of the race. He was a relie of times when people took things much more easily than they do now. and though he was logically indefensible, yet as part of the existing order of things he was both

Daily Press Office, Hongkong. For comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrighted. All the new words which the Chinese have of later cars been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinary, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in silense. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Panti pronunciations are given the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherte attained. The typography displays the success of in attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore chargetorized Chinese publications.

To illustrate the vest scope of the work the following facts ire submitted for consideration: Chalmers Vocabulary contains about 16,000 Chinese characters and Medhurst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, whilst this work contains more than 50,000 English words, and upwards of 800,000 Chinese charactors. Again Maspite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various appli-cations and equivalents of different words which have one general meaning. Of these examples this work contains more than five times as
